SPEAKER| Stephen Collins, former civil servant, reviewer of major programmes for the Office of Government
Commerce

ABSTRACT| The Apache AH-64 Longbow is considered the best attack helicopter in the world. Highly desired by the British Army and more expensive than rival bids, this multibillion-pound procurement option was chosen in 1995 amidst conflicting political considerations yet in 2012 it faced redundancy. Explore the pros and cons of keeping this formidable helicopter, the governance applied to these multibillion-pound decisions and current thinking about the future of the Apache fleet.
